

The Expanse: When Science on TV is Done Right.

5/25/2017 7:30:00 PM

1 Hour          Science          North 132A

Thanks for the lift- and the cancer. The Expanse is great show that is quickly getting a following. It also is getting a lot of thumbs up from scientists for accuracy. Our scientists talk about the science behind the show.

Teachers will discover resources for teaching science speculation on television, current topics in planetary science and discussion points for student engagement in popular culture.

Jackie Monkiewicz, Graduate Student, Astrophysics, Liberal Arts & Sciences, Arizona State University

David Williams, Associate Research Professor in the School of Earth and Space Exploration, Arizona State University

Ryan Anderson, USGS/NASA

Tanya Harrison, Director of Research for the Space Technology and Science ("NewSpace") Initiative at Arizona State University

